The UWS Urban Planning program is the most modern, up to date course dealing with the latest issues facing urban development.

If you want a say in the future of the city you live in, and improve the way people interact, live and work and their quality of life, then you really have to do an Urban Planning course at UWS.

This course has given me far a deeper knowledge and understanding of what this profession requires, and what it requires of me to do it well.

I've always been very conscious of my environment, the place I live in and how the shape of the space we all live in affects us. So I want to have some say in the matter.

That's why I chose UWS. I really felt that theirs was the most modern, up to date course dealing with the latest issues facing urban development. And because it focuses on the social aspects of development.

It teaches you how the environment influences our lives - our moods, our behaviour, our quality of life and how we enjoy where we live.

The course has given me far more than I ever expected. It's given me a deeper knowledge and understanding of what this profession requires, and what it requires of me to do it well.

It's also given me a really balanced view. You can't be 100% development and you can't be 100% environment. Extreme views just don't work in people's interests: Both need to be looked at together because you can't have one without the other.

The course also opens up a huge range of career options for you too. You can work at the council planning level, or on state government policy, with private consultancies, builders and developers both here and overseas.

If you want a say in the future of the city you live in, if you want to influence, for the better, the way people interact and improve their joy of where they live and work and their quality of life, then you really have to do an Urban Planning course at UWS.
