‘Doing an Urban Planning degree at UWS really sets you up for a successful career because the programs have a strong practical focus.’

If you’ve got the ambition to be a big picture thinker, strategic planner, space architect or urban designer, then the best place to launch your career is right here at UWS.

‘Everything you’re taught is directly related to real-life problems, community needs and state planning policies.’

Doing an Urban Planning degree at UWS really sets you up for a successful career because the programs have a strong practical focus. All the theory you’re taught is directly related to real-life problems and state planning policies.

So when you do get into the workplace you have a really good idea of how it all works in the real world. It takes on all the social elements of how the urban form effects how and where people live, how they travel around and the services needed, to keep it all going properly.

At UWS you’re taught by excellent academics with professional experience in all the areas you’re studying. And the classes are really small, so you’ll get lots of personal time one on one with them. Which makes a real big difference to how well and how much you learn. It also brings the students closer together so you get more support and encouragement during group work and projects.

And the campus is really relaxed and peaceful, so the whole combination adds up to a really enjoyable learning experience.

If you’ve got the ambition to be a big picture strategic planner, to shape the cities in which people live, to be a space architect, an urban designer, a transport planner or environmental consultant, with the opportunity to work at all government levels, then the best place to launch your career is right here at UWS.

URBAN PLANNING

Cameron Steuart
Planning Honours Student